Blank Clock Faces

One large clock face. Draw a time on it, or use it to show one.

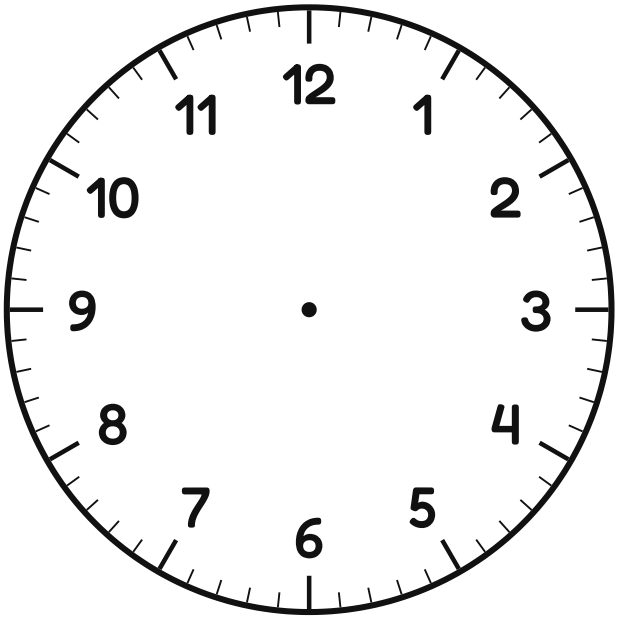

Blank Clock Faces

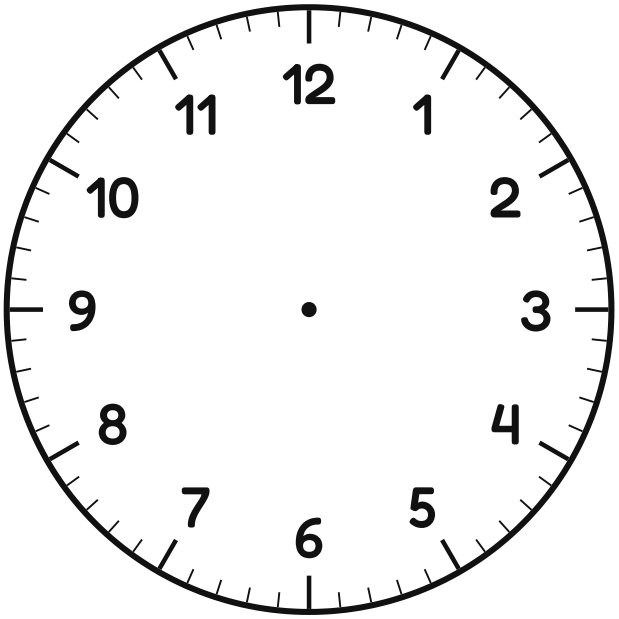

Draw a time on each clock, then write it on the line.

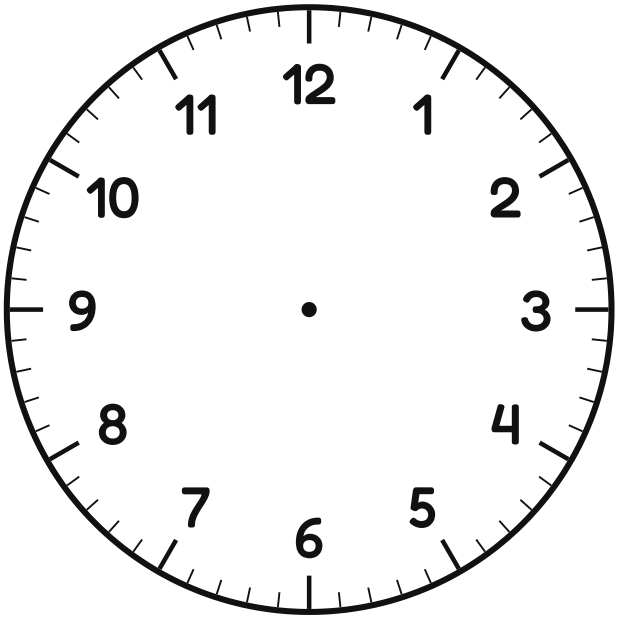

_____ : _____

_____ : _____

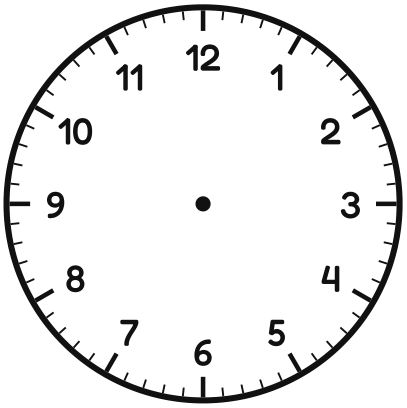

_____ : _____

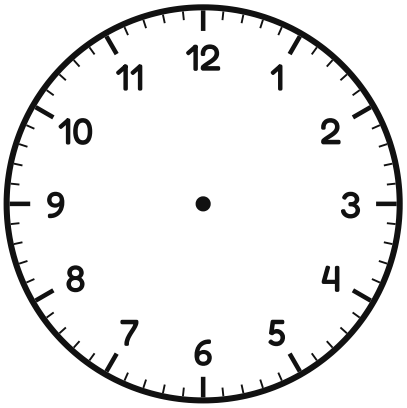

_____ : _____

Blank Clock Faces

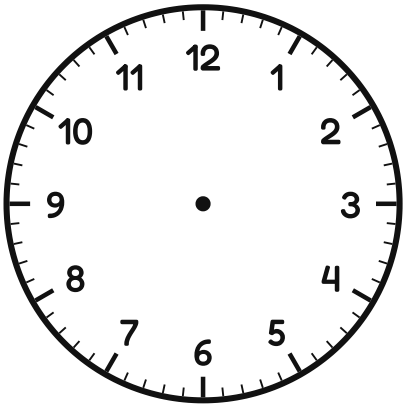

Draw a time on each clock, then write it on the line.

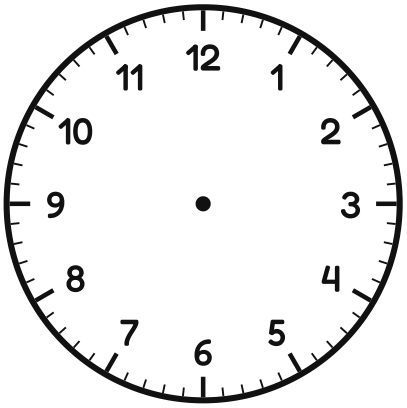

_____ : _____

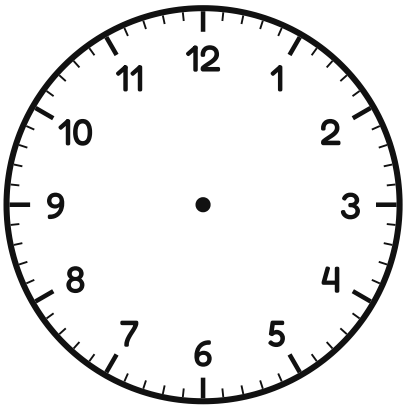

_____ : _____

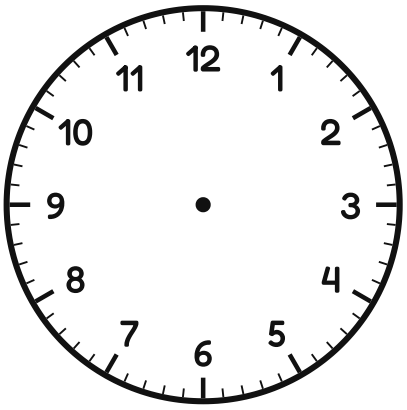

_____ : _____

_____ : _____

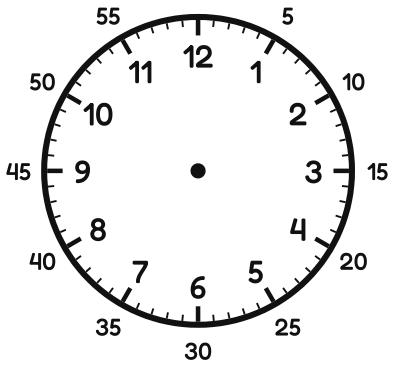

_____ : _____

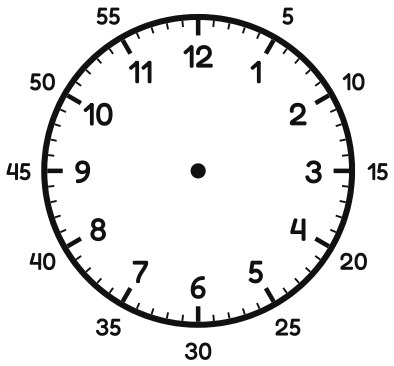

_____ : _____

Blank Clock Faces

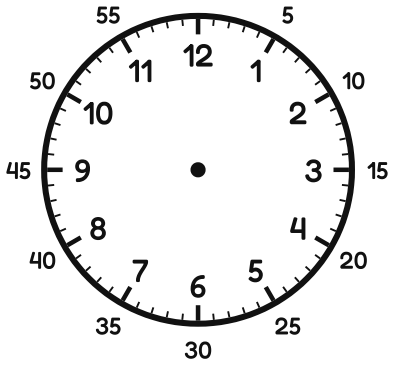

The small numbers count the minutes by 5s. Draw a time, then write it.

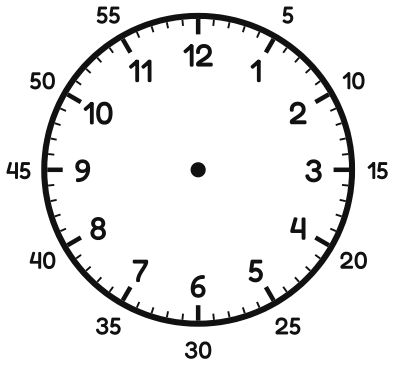

_____ : _____

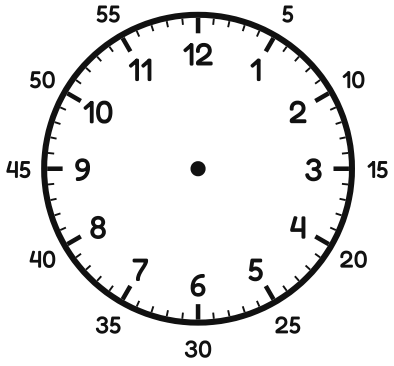

_____ : _____

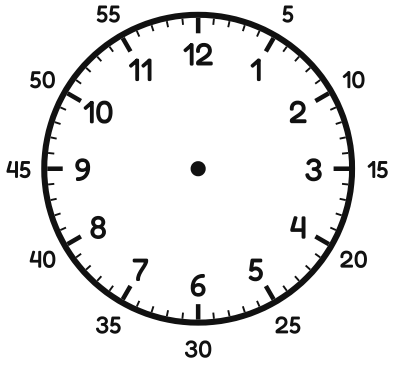

_____ : _____

_____ : _____

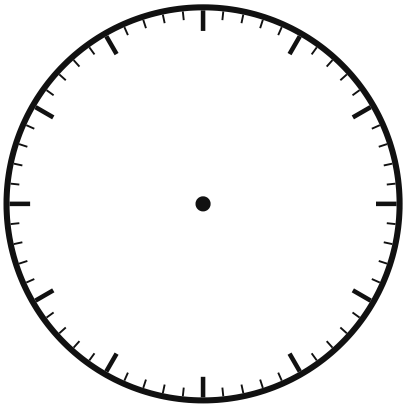

_____ : _____

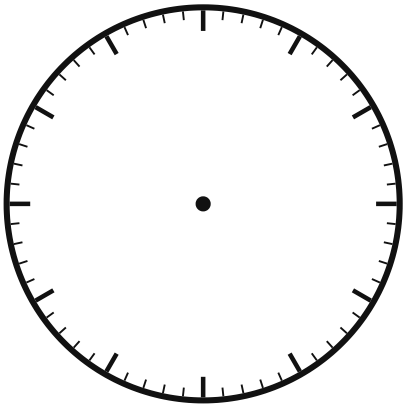

_____ : _____

Blank Clock Faces

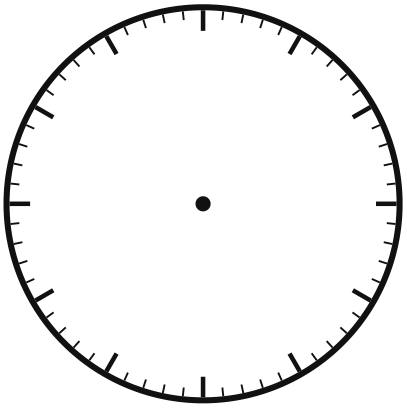

No numbers on these clocks: only the marks. Draw a time, then write it.

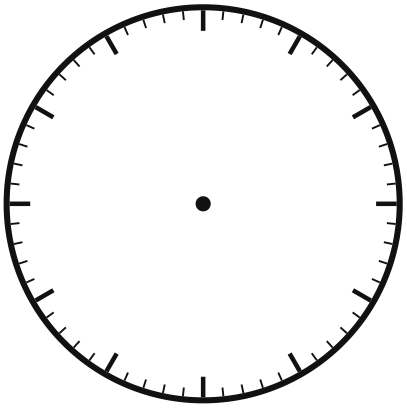

_____ : _____

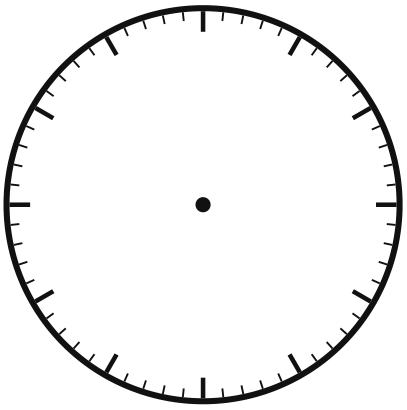

_____ : _____

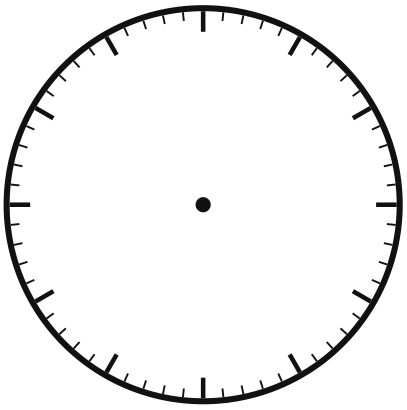

_____ : _____

_____ : _____

_____ : _____

_____ : _____

For Grown-Ups: How to Use These Templates

Print what you need, as many times as you need it. First to third grade.

Why use it

Blank clock faces let you make your own practice at any level: draw a time and ask your child to read it, or write a time and ask your child to draw the hands. Children learn the hour and half hour in first grade, 5 minutes in second, and the minute in third, or in second in Texas.

What it is good for

- Making your own practice at the level your child is on.
- Games: you draw, your child reads, then swap.
- Page 4, with the minutes printed, for counting by 5s.
- Page 5, with no numbers, as a stretch for third graders.

How to use it

1. Pick the page for your child: the large face to show a time, or a page of small ones.
2. Draw the hands on a clock, short for the hour and long for the minutes.
3. Your child reads it and writes the time on the line.
4. Then swap: you write a time and your child draws the hands.

> Try saying: “I drew a time. Which hand is short? What time is it?”

Tip: Slide a sheet into a plastic sleeve and use a dry erase marker to use it again and again.